

As someone who has enjoyed the benefits of Indiana's No Call law, I'm concerned about a federal law that would water down what we currently have here in this state. My husband and I often only see each other during our dinner hour, due to our work hours (I work days, he works evenings) and it has been wonderful to eat supper and not have our conversation interrupted by someone wanting to refinance our house or sell us replacement windows. The few calls we now receive during the dinner hour are people we really do want to hear from. If this federal regulation would really dilute the state law which is working so well, I would oppose it.
